‘Retaining City Histories – An Approach to Integrated Planning’ 13-14 MARCH 2020 NED

CURP 2020 THEME:

Human development has been indebted to cities that always tended to embrace opportunities to grow and reflect their identities. All cities irrespective of geographical variations have historical, social, political and economic context. Under the influence of political, economic and sociocultural factors cities undergo several development phases such as reconstruction, transformation, demolition and conservation. Retaining city histories with respect to tangible and intangible values possess several challenges of local governance, infrastructure development, socioeconomic planning for development, legal framework and enforcement, traffic and transportation, involvement of stakeholders and technical expertise. Retaining local identity having distinctive characters and visual integrity of historic cities has become a local pride that engenders sense of belonging and boosts tourism and related economic benefits. However, wave of urbanization, trend of cloned-global cities, massive expansion in city scale along with poorly conceived and badly implemented development policies have delineated historical urban environments. CURP20’ encourages paper presenters to share and generate strategic visions which may inspire the participants, decision makers, local politicians, planning agencies and bureaucrats to shape and co-ordinate their ‘Development’ undertakings to make positive differences. Following are some potential sub themes for the Conference:

- Technical expertise in urban conservation/heritage planning
- Criticism on the historiographical perspective of the city
- Historicity as source of documentation
- Impact of historiographic contextual account on city’s planning
- Reflection of history and historiography on integrated planning in global perspective
- Urban heritage and historicity
- Critical impact of responsible tourism towards city’s expansion
- Influence of oral history on urban designing
- Local tourism- challenges and emerging opportunities
